Nation Comes Together to Help City Rebuild Lower East Side mourns those lost, vows recovery

Dear Friends,

Last month's terrorist attacks on Manhattan and Washington shocked and changed us all. Not one of us remains unaffected by this deliberate tragedy. New Yorkers demonstrated the finest heroism and humanity during the direst hour. Thousands of you risked your lives to help others as smoke, ash and debris rained down from the World Trade Center. Thousands more of you streamed into blood donation centers to meet an incredible demand. Your spirit and resilience make this country great. Together we will rebuild New York even greater than it was before.

I am working in Congress to make sure relief and recovery resources are available. I have introduced legislation called the Phoenix Fund, which will allow American taxpayers to donate part of their refund to a targeted trust account for disaster victims. On my urging, the Small Business Administration has opened a recovery workshop on the Lower East Side at 62 Mott St.

I encourage you to contact the SBA or FEMA for help if you have been affected economically. If your business is threatened or if you have lost your job as a result of the disaster, you may qualify for federal assistance. Psychological and volunteer resources are also available.

Now it is important to maintain unity and fight discrimination as we recover from this assault on our nation.

The terrorist attacks left a gaping hole in lower Manhattan.

Town Halls Helped Prepare for NYCHA Hearing

Concerned residents confront housing agency’s plans

Congresswoman Nydia Velázquez hosted a series of town hall meetings to discuss the New York City Housing Authority’s plan for the coming year, including one at the Roberto Clemente School (P.S. 15). The meetings were designed to prepare the community for a NYCHA hearing August 21 that the agency held on its plan.

Housing residents were concerned about several NYCHA proposals for the coming year.

One is the community service requirement mandated by federal law that will impose unpaid work on unemployed housing residents who are not in school.

NYCHA also proposes to change how rent in public housing is determined. NYCHA is moving toward a flat rent system, where residents are vulnerable to rent hikes next year.

Finally, NYCHA would like to promote “deconcentration of poverty” by encouraging higher-income families to move to public housing. But this could be done at the expense of those families most in need of public housing.

Congresswoman Velázquez met with residents at the Roberto Clemente School and led a march to the August 21 NYCHA hearing to make sure all views were heard.

Rally Protests Garment Worker Sweatshop Conditions

Coalition opposes exploitation of low-wage factory workers

Congresswoman Nydia M. Velázquez joined the Union of Needletrades, Industrial and Textile Workers (UNITE) to protest sweatshop conditions in factories that manufacture top fashion brands.

She even cut up her Banana Republic card to oppose companies who profit from clothes made by garment workers who are poorly paid, overworked and often forced to live where they work. Factory owners regularly block unions formed to protect workers’ rights.

“Shame on you,” Congresswoman Velázquez said outside the store. “Banana Republic, Ann Taylor, we are watching you. We will hold you accountable.”

UNITE announced a web site for consumer news about fashion retailers and sweatshop conditions that can be viewed on the World Wide Web at www.behindthelabel.org.
